What are the different types of machinery leasing agreements?

When it comes to leasing machinery, there are two main types of agreements: finance leases and operating leases. Each type has its unique benefits and conditions, making them suitable for different business needs. Finance leases, also known as capital leases, are designed for businesses that eventually want to own the machinery.

What is a machinery lease agreement?

Cash Flow: Preserve capital for other business needs. A machinery lease agreement is a binding document between the machinery owner (lessor) and the user (lessee) that outlines the terms, responsibilities, and conditions under which the machinery will be leased. This agreement ensures clarity and protects both parties in case of disputes.
