Why does equipment appear in a rental agreement more often?

The equipment rental agreement can regulate the renting conditions of any given type of equipment. As a result, some equipment appears in rental agreements more frequently than others because they are too expensive or needed only on a one-off basis. The following types of equipment are most frequent:

Who is involved in an equipment rental agreement?

There are two parties involved in every equipment rental agreement - the lessor and the lessee. The lessor is the legal term of the owner of the equipment and the party the equipment is being rented from. The lessee is the party that rents the equipment from the lessor and agrees to pay rent for a specified period.
